The trotters and trotting bred roadsters follow the hackneys with prizes aggregating S5,500 in the fourteen classes to which they are eligible. This year there are to be two $500 prizes for trotting sires shown with four of their get instead of one prize, as has heretofore been the rule. In the champion class, only such staillons as have taken a first prize at some recognized horse show, are eligible, while in the junior circuit the competitor is between non-winners. This important change in the prize list is intended to bring together in one class as noted horse as Quartermaster and Alexamara, and leave other classes open to young sires that have not yet worther spurs in the ring. Desides the classes of trotters and Hackneys, there are others for thoroughbreds, parriage horses, tandems, hunters, etc. Entries close October 17th.

GOGOL'S PLAY.

(From the National Review.) Good's well-known play, "The Inspector." he completed and produced on the stage in the same year, (180%.) It is one of his writings which is best known in this country, for it has been translated into French by Prosper Medines, and twice quite recently into English. The plot is extremely simple. A provincial town, in which the officials are steeped in corruption, is thrown into consternation by a report that an inspector (revizor) is on his way from St. Petersburg to make a searching investigation into their conduct. Then it is rumored that he is actually come, and is stopping at the hotel. At once the mayor nurries off to pay court to him. The supposed inspector, however, is a young government clerk, who is traveling in the province, and, having lost all his money at cards, is waiting for fresh supplies from his father, and meanwhile, being unable to pay his hotel bill, is treated by the landlord with contumely. Under these oir even his frank avo wai that he has not a sec only produces the ofter of a loan, he accepts the situation and olays the part of inspector maigned his with finding zero.

He borrows morey from everybody, flirts with the mayor's wife, and proposes for the hand of his daughter, while he exhibits astonishing feats in that art of gratulitous lying in which Russians are such adents. The play ends with his hurried departure and the arrival of the real revizor. Gogol's well-known play, "The Inspect hurried departure and the arrival of the real revizor.

The simplicity of the plot has provoked a smile from more than one countryman of Scribe and Sardou, but the plot is a mere peg on which to hang a scathing gatire on the corruption of Russian official life. A rollicking farce on the surface, at the bottom it is bitter, serious truth. The Czar Nicholas is said to have sent for the author, after the first perfermance, to the royal box. "I have contained to much as I have done this evening," said the czar. "I confess, sire," replied Gogol, "that I had-a different object in view." The play is still often given on the Russian stage, and the public still laughs, and the Augean stables of Russian official life remain uncleansed.
